

GROUP MAP

Introduction

Students can come from many different places. Especially when you teach at a college or near a military base. The goal of this activity is to get an overview of where everyone is from and where they have lived.

Directions

There will be a map of the world and students will come and place a mark where they used to live or where they were born if they haven't moved. You may also want to have different colors mean different things. For example, you could have green pins represent the place you were born, and blue pins represent the last place you lived.

Online Version

If you do not have access to a physical map, you could also use a projector to project an image of a map onto a white board and have students use dry erase markers to mark where they have lived.

Materials

This activity would work best with a large physical map that you do not mind having holes poked into it. You would also need to have a lot of different pins to place onto the map. If you want to do the online version all you need is a projector, a white board and some dry erase markers.
